THEDA BARA in "SALOME"

Herod Antipas, tyrannical Tetrarch of Judea is hated by his people. Cowardly, cruel and vacillating he clings to power by currying favor with the Roman Caesars, but the oppressed Judeans constantly clamor for a return of the old Hyrcanian dynasty. The direct heir to this rival line, and chief candidate for the office of High Priest, is Prince David, brother of Queen Marian. Herod is completely under the sway of the sinister Salome beautiful Princess of the Herodian dynasty, who hopes some day to wield imperial power. Salome fears the growing influence of Prince David, and after he is created High Priest prevails upon sejanus, Captain of the Guards, to draw him to his bath. The next obstacle in the path of the ambitious Princess is the Queen. Therefore when Marion sends a ceremonial cup of wine to Herod upon his departure for Rome, Salome poisons it and arouses the King's suspicion against his wife. He gives the wine to the Queen's maid, Naomi, who drinks it and drops dead. Salome, deceitfully intercedes for Marion and saves her for the moment from execution. But later she tells the Queen that Herod caused Prince David's murder and conspires with her to kill him. Herod is awaked from his sleep by a scream from Salome to find his Queen trying to stab him and Salome heeling back the dagger. Marian is immediately beheaded by order of her royal husband. With her path to the throne apparently cleared Salome is alarmed by the denunciations of one John, the Baptist, who bitterly rebukes the sins of Herod and his court. Moved by curiosity and by a desire to win the strange preacher to her side, she goes to meet him and attempts to seduce him with her wiles. She is scorned for her effort. She again visits him in prison where Herod has thrown him for stirring up sedition among the people, and using every passionate appeal known to her sex, entreats him to love. When he again denounces her, she vows to have him destroyed. On the same night a great throng is gathered in the palace to partake of the King's birthday feast. Salome appears before Herod and begins a wild, sensuous fascinating dance which so inflames the doting Monarch that he exclaims,—ask me what thou wilt, and it shall be granted—even unto the half of my kingdom. Salome calls for the head of John, the Baptist on a charger. While she is gloating over her horrid prize, a terrific storm of wind, lightning and hail strikes the palace and the guests flee in fear. Herod in superstitious terror cites to his soldiers "kill that woman" and Salome's evil life is ended under sharp-spiked Roman shields.
